

CO,

The reason I'm writing this is because I feel you are the only person that can make the changes necessary for others to not suffer the same fate I did. If you can successfully take action and make the changes, you will prevent more suicides within the navy. When someone fails out, drops out or pulled from a special program, they go through a re-rate process. That's where this stems back from.

~~It's~~ It's a process that someone has 30 minutes to "pick" a rate. Well if you're even the slightest bit lucky, you get more than just undesignated. This is what the navy does with special program failures... me? I was in SEAL training when I had a broken tibia, pneumonia and Sipe, denied medical attention and was pulled from the class... since then I've been labeled a failure ESPECIALLY by the Navy. The command didn't help by me trying to move on but everyone holds it against me.

 EVERYTHING I ever worked for was wrongfully taken away from me MAY 6th 2016 I got tired of living a failures life. I hope you can help the future and do this, somehow get the rate process changed to pick any rate someone qualifies for without a waiver based on ASVAB score.
 I KNOW I am not the only one who has suffered and I KNOW I am not the only one who has come to this ~~conclusion~~ conclusion. I know it might sound small but its also something you will never understand if you weren't there.
 I put this in your box so you had to listen and I hope

You are able to make the change for the greater good to prevent and ~~possibly~~ possibly stop this from happening in the future. That's my advice to the Navy. Maybe I'll just be a number like everyone else, BUT at least I tried!
